UAMENTARY AFFAIRS, DEPARTMENTS OF ELECTRONICS AND OCEAN DEVELOPMENT (SHRI EDUARDO FALERIO): (a) Yes, Sir.

(b) The computer systems and associated operating systems now-a-days available in the market have lot of features by which adequate level of security for data in the computer can be maintained. The encryption devices are available which encrypts the data within the computer and the data flowing on a network between the two computers. In addition, user organisations form their own procedures and guidelines for the use of computers and protect data according to their need. This include the password, identification number, authorisation to use the system and physical access. These features are built in the application software over and above the security features of computer hardware and associated operating software. The Government of India had also appointed a committee in 1989 to study the computer viruses which are also classified as a part of the computer crimes. The committee has analysed the type of viruses which can affect the computers and its vulnerability to data networks in India, the committee also prepared guidelines to tackle such viruses. The report of the committee and the guidelines were widely circulated to the major users in the country.

(c) Out of 147 Indian Missions/Posts abroad, 99 were using computers in various areas of their functioning as on 31st March, 1995. As for the remaining Missions/Posts, computers are proposed to be introduced during the current financial year, subject to availability of funds.
